

4 Service Assessment of the Meramec Region

Personal Mobility

Available means of personal mobility can be categorized as private, commercial, public and client-specific.

Private Transportation

Residents of the United States primarily rely on personal automobiles to move from one place to another. According to the U.S. Bureau of Transportation Statistics, approximately 92 percent of all U.S. households possess a motor vehicle to help satisfy their personal mobility needs.

The U.S. Census Bureau in 2000 found that 93 percent of Missouri households had at least one motor vehicle; 62 percent had two or more. Only 7 percent of the households had no vehicle. However, when analyzing the availability of vehicles in Missouri households 65 and older, nearly 15 percent did not have a vehicle.

Regardless of the number of households in possession of a vehicle, there is still a need for other forms of personal mobility, both for households with automobiles and for those without. The needs of families and individuals who do not have direct access to a vehicle are obvious, however, those with automobiles also need alternative forms of transportation.

For example, family members may go multiple places, leaving some family members with transportation needs when the family vehicle is not available. Another example would be when one's health prevents the use of the personal vehicle.

Growing concerns about energy consumption, the soaring price of fuel and increasing insurance costs may necessitate other forms of transportation, other than the personal vehicle.

Additionally, certain trips—those over long distances as well as those involving larger groups of people—may not be suited to the personal vehicle. While personal vehicles are available to most residents, other forms of transportation are desired and needed.

Commercial Transportation

Commercial forms of transportation include airlines, trains, buses and taxis. These types of transportation may be public subsidized but typically operate to make a profit. These services may also operate on a regional or statewide basis and are aimed at providing access to more distant designations.

In the Meramec Region, only the Waynesville-St. Robert airport at Forney Field on Fort Leonard Wood offers commuter air services. Most every county in the region is home to at least one airport, but these are used primarily by hobby pilots and industry executives.

The only commuter train in the region is Amtrak, which makes two daily stops in Hermann, MO., at the northern reaches of the region.

While there are no official bus stops or ticket locations, Greyhound buses still make pre-arranged stops in the region. Additionally, USA Tours offers commuter services from Rolla to Fort Leonard Wood and back for work. USA Express offers airport shuttles to and from Lambert International Airport in St. Louis. Various taxi, van and limousine services also serve the region. These private services come and go as the demand in rural areas is sometimes not enough to support a for-profit business.

Public Transportation

While available in every county in the Meramec Region, public transportation is limited and serves primarily the elderly and disabled populations. Service providers—such as OATS and Southeast Missouri Transportation Services—operate primarily on fixed-routes during the week. Services are limited by funding—both in the number of trips that can be offered in a given week as well as the clients that can use the service. Only 1 percent of the workers 16 and older in the Meramec Region in 2000 used public transportation to travel to work.

Client-Specific Transportation

Several entities in the Meramec Region provide transportation services for their clients. Public schools own busses or contract transportation services to move students from home to school and back and to and from school-related activities.

The federal Head Start program is a pre-school program for children 5 years and under from low income families as well as disabled children. Head Start, operated primarily by Community Action Agencies, transports children between their home and Head Start Centers using vans and small busses.

Many churches have their own church vans to transport parishioners to and from church, primarily on Wednesdays and Sundays. Some Senate Bill 40 boards, Sheltered Workshops and other special needs facilities developmentally disabled group homes and nursing homes operate vans to provide transportation to their workers and residents.

More recently, a few hospitals have started operating or supporting vans/shuttles to transport patients to those hospitals and doctors associated with those hospitals.
